

BAYVIEW CAPITAL GROUP ANNOUNCES LATEST TRANSACTION

WAYZATA, MINNESOTA, July 29, 2016 — Bayview Capital Group announced today that its client, Stellar Technologies, Inc. ("Stellar"), has been acquired by Cirtec Medical LLC ("Cirtec") a portfolio company of Century Park Capital Partners.

Headquartered in Brooklyn Park, MN, Stellar is one of the leading providers of precision machining, component manufacturing, and assembly services for medical devices, including neuromodulation lead wire assemblies, mechanical assemblies, delivery systems, and electro-mechanical medical devices. The acquisition of Stellar will provide Cirtec with the ability to offer its customers a full suite of services and help further establish Cirtec as the premiere contract manufacturer for Class III medical devices.

Brian Highley, CEO of Cirtec, said, "The acquisition of Stellar will further enhance our commitment to providing our customers with the latest innovative technologies, specifically in the high-growth neuro-modulation market. We are also very excited to join Minnesota's 'Medical Alley' with this acquisition. The greater Twin Cities area has long been known as a major center for medical technology and device companies. A defining rationale for this acquisition is having access to the talented and well-educated workforce in the area, as well as providing continued support to our customers based here. We couldn't be more excited for the future of our combined businesses."

Chip Roellig, Managing Partner with Century Park Capital Partners, commented, "The combination of Stellar and Cirtec will open up a wide range of market synergies for both companies as they are able to cross-sell products and services to each other's existing customer bases. This combination creates a company with a national footprint providing a unique set of products and services to some of the most technically advanced medical device OEMs in the world."
